BLENDED WHISKY

Blended whiskies are a mixture of two or more whisky types, often combining single malts with grain whiskies to allow for a smaller price tag. Although this sometimes results in a compromise when it comes to flavour, many master blenders can create finely balanced spirits that can genuinely hold their own against a single malt.

COGNAC

Named after the town of Cognac in France, where it is produced, Cognac is a variety of brandy pot-distilled from the juice of the Trebbiano grape and aged for a minimum of two years – sometimes up to 100. In both cases, the letters VS mean the brandy has been aged for two years; VSOP indicates three; and XO, six.

VODKA

Taking its name from the Slavic word for water ('voda'), vodka – or variants of it – emerged across the countries of northern Europe and Scandinavia (the so-called 'vodka belt') in the 1400s, likely originating in Poland.

Blending ethanol distilled from grains or potatoes with water, it is colourless and largely flavourless – which is probably why humanity has found no better mixer drink in the last 600 years.

The quintessential drink of the Caribbean (and the navies, merchants and pirates who sailed among them), rum is generally found wherever sugarcane grows. Made by distilling the molasses produced by sugar processing and ageing it in oak casks, it comes in numerous varieties, depending on the barrels used, the length of ageing and the spices and flavours added.

LIQUEURS & EXOTICS

The volume and variety of liqueurs available is testament to mankind's ingenuity when it comes to making alcohol. Often developed as traditional herbal remedies and invented in monasteries, liqueurs are made by infusing spirits with fruits, spices, seeds, herbs and other ingredients and adding sugar syrups, resulting in a rainbow of possible flavours – from the bitter tang of Campari to the sweetness of Solerno (it's a Scottish blood orange liqueur).
